

Mr. Stripling: She knew that you were returning documents which you had taken from the State Department?

Mr. Chambers: She had full knowledge of the operation.

Mr. Stripling: You were fully aware that these were not just routine documents, but documents of tremendous importance to the State Department?

Mr. Chambers: Yes, I was fully aware of that.

Mr. Stripling: And documents which would be of extreme interest to the Soviet Union?

Mr. Chambers: Yes sir.

Mr. Stripling: Do you know of any other individual in the Government who furnished you information from the files of the Government, which was intended to be released to agents or agencies of the Soviet Government to be transmitted to the Soviet Union?

Mr. Chambers: Yes, Harry Dexter White turned over such documents.

Mr. Nixon: To you?

Mr. Chambers: Yes.

Mr. Stripling: What were the nature of those documents?

Mr. Chambers: I can recall the reports of a Captain Polisten, Naval Intelligence reports. He also turned over certain other documents dealing with Manchukuo, I believe, which I remember because they contained a list of Japanese agents, whose names I translated into English and typed them.

Mr. Stripling: Regarding Harry Dexter White, what were the form of the documents he turned over to you, were they originals or copies?

Mr. Chambers: Those to which we have just referred were originals. Mr. White sometimes wrote the reports from information which he gathered around the Treasury Department. I have turned over to my lawyer, who has, I
